

The house on Seaver Street, Wellesley Hills, Massachusetts, where I was "given up for dead." In the kitchen of this house was held the first stockholders' meeting of the Business Statistics Organization, Inc.

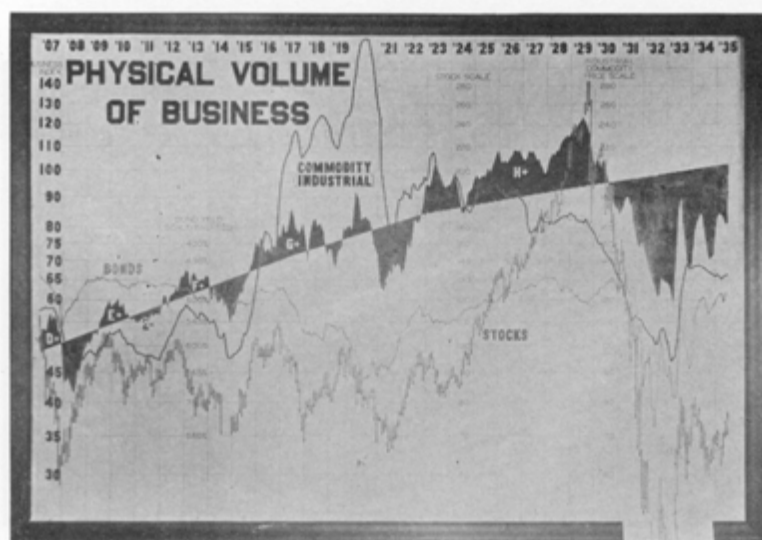

Annisquam, Massachusetts. The arrow shows a square house with a cupola where I spent my summers recuperating.

Sir Isaac Newton, born 1642, died 1727, upon whose writings the policies of Babson's Reports are based.

Administration Building of Babson's Reports, with Roger W. Babson exhibiting the Babsonchart at the close of one of his Conferences.

A close-up view of the Babsonchart as it appeared in July, 1935. The areas above the Normal Line represent prosperity, and the areas below represent depression. The solid line represents commodity prices, the broken line which runs off the chart at the bottom represents the stock market. The middle line represents the bond market.

My grandfather's barn and cows which supplied milk to the best families of Gloucester in 1880, when sanitation was unknown and everybody used the family roller towel.

Cabinets manufactured by me fifty years later, to give every member of the family a fresh individual paper towel at all times.
